

Arguments of Sarah Greene

- making a dozen embryos and just implanting one is killing eleven human beings
- parents would be able to create their perfect child
- doing research with embryonic stem cells always means killing a human being since an embryo is human life already
- gender is not a disease and parents shouldn't be able to choose the gender of their child
- people could misuse genetic engineering
- the danger of abnormalities is high
- human rights are not guaranteed → every human being has the right to live
